The figure of the artist

«...The figure of the artist is "not free", however, in the sense that they are subordinate to and in the service of their impulse to create. A genuine artist has the utmost loyalty and fidelity to their inner voice, which is a real, full-time vocation, as if they are following a higher, religious calling. The artist's path is truly spiritual, as they have offered their life in service to something beyond and greater than themselves. The artist is not a person endowed with free will who seeks his own ends, but one who allows art to realize its purposes through him. The artist has an "inner necessity" to create new forms that express what they are experiencing...»

Art-making is a sacred act

«...Art-making is a sacred act. Art attains its greatest numinosity and ability to affect others when the creator of the work of art is being transformed in and through the act of creating. There is a world of difference between copying, imitating and aping sacred art, and living our own creative experience. Continually participating in our own creative process, our unique articulation of our experience then becomes imbued with a psycho-activating energy, which can non locally catalyze a process of transformation throughout the entire universe...»
